QUICK TIPS – HONOURING COMMITMENTS

For every commitment that one makes, the goal is to deliver a quality outcome, on time and within the allocated resources. What if this isn't always possible?

The Causes

Even the best-intentioned commitments, sometimes cannot be fulfilled. Causes for this might include:

♦ Taking on too many commitments
♦ Conflicting priorities
♦ Unanticipated events
♦ Underperformance by a subordinate or team member
♦ Inadequate planning
♦ Poor time management
♦ Procrastination
♦ Neglect

When a commitment starts to fall behind, the initial reaction is to try to catch up. Much like a circus juggler, one rushes back and forth between commitments, forestalling them all from crashing to the ground. As deadlines loom closer, the commitments become a stressful and unpleasant exercise.

Possible Actions

♦ Work harder and longer
♦ Drop something else
♦ Avoid the sponsor
♦ Ignore the situation

At some point, however, the most appropriate action may be to explore whether the deliverables or resources can be re-negotiated. This is better done sooner than later, so that there is a real opportunity for meaningful negotiations.

When a commitment seems to be in jeopardy, the true professional takes responsibility for the situation and demonstrates the maxim, “No Surprises”.

To view other management-related articles and issues, go to: www.diamondmanagementinstitute.com